Comments on information on the areas of the administrative units and the resulting area of the country

It is relatively common for the area figures for the country to contradict the data given in other sources. The reason for such discrepancies is usually that we calculate the area of the Land from the individual data of the administrative units of the Land, which were given in more detailed analyses, usually in the previous census reports. This often results in such deviations. The country area is not always constant - as in the example of The Gambia, where the country area differs 2024 by 181.4 km² compared to 2013 - the area sum of the last census - in which case it is set higher for 2024. The reasons for such deviations can be of different nature, new measurements, more precise use of technology, territorial changes, etc. or even the reference to different sources.

In states for which a 2nd level of data is available, this data is then checked by analysing the more recent census data and corrected if necessary.
